The horses in life were Bannstyne's Audubon, Hitchnook's Busy Bee, Lonestaff's Coronet, Donahue's Cariboo, and Torrance's Moonstone. Of these, the favorill in was about evenly divided between Audubor and Cariboo. The first heat was led throughout by Cariboo. At the fourth hurdle Andubon, who had run second all the way, reforeed to jamp, and when spurred to the leap be three his rider over the fence. The second heat was a repetition of the first, with the accident left out, and the contestants reduced to four, by reason of Audubon being distanced. Busy Be apped Cariboo occasionally, and, paired, they left the other two from four to six lengths behind. Busy Bee could not make the increased speed of the home stretch, and the second place was taken from her by Moonstone. At the close the four the property but it was none the less for the money in it. A SCAMP'S RASCALITIES.

It is only a few years ago that the Treasurer of a Minor be relief society was discovered to have used between four and five thousand collars of the society' money. This man was a particular friend of Ottman and a constant visitor at his place. There is now but very little doubt that this man's money went in over Mr. Ottman's fence. Gen. Spinner says it is almost equally certain that Johnson, the clerk who stole the money from his office during his absence two years ago, covered it in over Ottman's fence.

Johnson and Ottman were such intinate friends as to excite suspicion that something was suring. But the strangest thing of all connected

A MINISTER'S CONFESSION.

Vigorous Words from a Citizen who is Sick of THE REV. MR. DAWSON'S OPERA-TIONS IN STOCKS AND LOVE.

The allegations were that he had gambled in mining stocks, em-bezzied money entrusted to him, and had given more attention to an unmarried female of his his possession. I have put it in this mild way so as not to hurt Billy's feelings.

It is considered by many persons that the Boss and Billy have some traits of character exactly in the interest of the leaders and petty ward politicians of their party, who must not be offended by their removal, because they know too much and might blab. The public money is lavishly and illegally expended by enemics. He says:

Actomystock operations, I have always deemed myself at perfect liberty to invest my own money at I picased, and without regars to other people's wishes, well knowing that only the envirous would find taut with me for making money, or rejoice if I lost it. As to using the moneys of others in stocks, I have done so in a few instances where I thought I had trustworthy information, and wanten to sid and befriend those whom I deemed real friends. When I took any money in this way, it was with the understanding in most cases that I was to have half the profits, or stand all the loss. And to make them secure in was of my death, I generally gave time entirely able to meet all such liabilities. Doing business in this way, all accounts were kept in my name as one account. And this wrecked me, for as soon as stocks depreciated till they were worth a half or a fourth of what I gave for them, every one wanted the full amount of his money piaced in my hands.

THE MUTGAL FRIEND.

But alas for the course of this pure, angelic love, Mr. Dawson and his idol had a mutual friend, a female, in woom, he says, he confided "as a mother." This mother acted as a post office for the loving couple waiting anxiously for the divorce papers which were to make Dawson free to marry again. Some of the letters she retained, and having a petty pique against Dawson, she took a woman's revenge by turning over his missives to the Presbytery. Dawson resumed from that body, as he explains, "to shield the young lady from being dragged before public view."

His resignation was accepted, but some of his

SHOT DEAD.

A Queens County Constable's Method of Dealing with Highwaymen. Constable Abraham Hamer of Jamaica went to Newton on Wednesday night to serve a warrant, and was detained until half past II o'clock before he started for home. His way was over the old Myrtle avenue road, which is densely shaded, and which has been noted as the scene of highway robberies. As the officer entered the woods he placed a cocked revolver on the seat of the buggy by his side. The vehicle was an open one. He rode on in the darkness about two miles, and when south of the Grosiean Brick Works his horse suddenly shied into the ditch, and a man grabbed the horse's head and seemed to have entangled his clothing in the shaft of the carriage. The vehicle was almost overturned by the horse's spring into the ditch, and the revolver fell to the hiele was almost overturned by the horse's spring into the ditch, and the revolver fell to the bottom of the wagon box. Hamer coolly picked it up, took deliberate aim at the man, and fired. The man dropped to the ground without a word or a sound save a slight gurgle from his threat. The constable quieted his horse, and litting the man, saw that he was dead. He did not breathe, and there was no pulsation of the heart. Hamer lifted the wagon to the road, and the horse, having become restless again, backed the hind wheels over the prostrate man's body, but the man showed no signs of life. Just then the constable heard a whistle from the north and an answering one from the south, and believing them to be the signals of confederates, he waited, revolver in hand, to give them a warm reception should they approach. He waited by the corpse for half an hour, and seeing no one, went his way to Jamaica. There he awoke the Coroner, and both returned to remove the body for safety until morning. But the body was gone. There were blood marks on the ground and tracks of the horse and of the man. At daybreak a party scoured the woods in the neighborhood, but without finding a cline, and the supposition is that the confederates watched the constable's going, and then took the body away and buried it.

Hamer is one of the most courageous officers in Queens county. He says that he wishes he had put the body in the wagon and taken it to Jamaica.

The present operations are limited to fluctuations of 197224 2 cent, the financial ability of a majority of the speculators not permitting a wider range without embarrassment. The leafing manipulators are consequently obliged to trade within a narrow compass, and unless some unfavorable news intervenes, or important local failures are announced, the market ought within a few days to be a purchase for a short term.

The weakness of Western Union in its decline from 84% to 83% was the occasion of much remark, because this stock has for some time been been employed to hold the market while realizations in other stocks were being effected. It is reported also that there is a controversy going on among the directors respecting the future dividends of the company, one party advocating a quarterly dividend of 1 2 cent. in stock in addition to the regular 2 2 cent, now established. Pacific Mail was also a feature, and further yielded M 2 cent. to 38%, the point, it will be remembered, from which it started Tuesday, on its upward course to 40%.
